THE RAGPICKERS.

ONE ELEMENT OF THE POPULA TION OF A GREAT CITY.

Dine Blood Owners of Horses and Wagons-Aristocrats of the Hand Cart. Rummagers of Morning and Night.

Rammagers of Moraing and Night

Life Near the Dumps.

Ragpickers form a very important element of the busy population of a great city like Brooklyn, and a careful observation of their methods will reveal some curious and interesting facts. They are properly divided into four distinct classes, each having a separate field of action and seldom infringing upon the territory of the other divisions of the fraternity. The first class, who could quite properly be called the upper ten of ragpickerdom, includes the litherant dealers who conduct their business by means of of ragpickerdom, includes the itinerant deal-ers who conduct their business by means of dilapidated looking horses and wagons. They would undoubtedly indignantly resent their elassification with ordinary ragpickers, but candor compels me to name them as such. They pay an annual license fee of $3 for the privilege of buying the city's rubbish.

They pay a higher price for goods than the men who propel the handcarts, and frequently hire shops of their own for assort-ment and storage of their purchases. They generally carry on a thriving business, and Bress planes that he has four orders and from long experience and acquaintance paid for before they arrive, so they will be know where the choicest rags are found. know where the choicest rogs are found. They have regular dates for calling on small tailoring establishments in order to secure the cuttings and trimmings which are too small to be used by rag manufacturers. They also get the pickings of small shirt factories, printing houses, book binderies and a score of similar establishments.

THE HAND CART ARMY. The second class comprises the army of hand cort dealers who can be seen every day pushing their trucks, adorned with from one to a score of motley shaped, sized and toned bells, along in front of them. They are avaricious in their dealings, man-age to live in moderate circumstances, and are willing to purchase a number of articles which must people classify as rubbish. But what is rubbish to some people—from and other metals, benes and old curpets and a mulis always well posted in the tricks of the trade, and have certan streets which they have drummed for years. By long trade, and have drummed for years. have drummed for years. By long experi-ence they learn which of their customers will sell his rugs at any price, and which will haggle with them over the last penny. They often find unexpected treasures in their purchases, and rurely return anything valuable tint thus comes within their clutch.

We now come to the third class of rag-pickers, who are by far the most aggressive in their methods. I refer to the rummagers who are abroad early in the morning and late at night, overhanding our ash cans and ash barrels. They are mostly Italians, and carry huge bugs and a long iron book, not unlike a stove poker. They are numbered by the thousands, are almost unacquainted with the laws and customs of this country, ive in the poorest class of tenements, and by the most stringent economy and industry manage to save up quite respectable bank accounts. The inborn passions of the Italian race are but little modified by our limate, or by contact with our people, and fatal afrays are of frequent occurrence among them. They are clannish, preserve meie national customs, subsist on the cheap-st food and endure privations and hardships that would kill nine out of ten of our untive population. This class take everything from a barrel that their hooks will drug forth-old boots, shoes, hats, rage, fragments of carpet, bottles, cories, horse bair, feathers, paper, wood, coal, tigar stubs—indeed everything except ashes and clinkers. Often the barrels of brown stone fronts yield rich flads to these delvers. A PLETHORIC BUNDLE.

One day I saw a swarthy fellow step be fore balf a down barrels grouped on the sidewalk before a Clinton avenue house, and hand forth article after amiela, among Outlie-Bets, Stabpt 100 market easier, choice favry harry cores $4.000 j. feeders far a speed $1.000 j. feeders begin in the finder's besidenantier; an old far which was immediately substituted for a which was immediately substituted for a speed $1.000 j. feeders far a speed which were the following: A Turkish rug, dilapidated cap on the finder's head; old shoes, raps and articles of tin ware, which were thrust into his roomy bag, and an apple and a crust of bread, which, after a few preliminary polishes on milord's soiled coat sleeves were revenously devoured. had arrived at the spot with a bag having a decidedly emaciated appearance, but left with a plethoric bundle, under whose weight be could hardly stagger. Harvest time with all rag pickers comes in the spring. For then it is that houses are cleaned, families move, old carpets are thrown away, old garments are discarded and thousands of articles find their way to the teeming ssh barrel. Brooklyn pays about $65,000 annually for the removal of its nshes, and last year over 200,000 loads wer South Brooklyn and elsewhere. It is marthere dumps, in miserable hovels, that the last, but by no means the least, class of this rest family of ragpickers dwell. They are up betimes in the morning awaiting the arrival of the ash carts like as many vultures would await the coming of prey, and no carrion crows ever plunged their talons in the carcass of a deed cow with more vorneity than these people settle down to a frouzy examination of the ash heaps. A person would suppose that little remains in the sales after the rummaging of the Italian street pickers. But men, wemen and children by the hundreds work there with bug and basket from sumrise to surset. Old coal scuttles, pots, ketales, pans, broken crockery, hats, caps, bonnets, cast off gar-monts, feathers, coal, wood and multitudes of similar articles are taken to the finders' shanties and cleaned and repaired for personal use. Old metal, rags, paper, bones, bettles, tin cans and scraps of tin, hair, corks, bits of leather and rope are carried
